

After recovering well from her nighttime accident, our loyal, dedicated Penka is back in action helping the animals on Varna's streets wherever her watchful eyes see poor, abandoned or sick emergencies. Penka feeds the few street dogs (years of castration campaigns are having an effect) during her daily animal welfare rounds. But Penka can only feed the many cats that only come out at night. Penka is currently looking for animal welfare groups to help capture unneutered cats so that the animals can be neutered immediately. The cats have multiplied and must be reduced in a civilized manner through neutering. Animal welfare is a lifelong task and exhausting in every respect. That's why Animal Life stays by the side of Varna's street animals, and by the side of our loyal Penka and her animal welfare team. All costs incurred for the protection and welfare of street animals in Varna and the surrounding area have been and will continue to be paid by Animal Life. Animal Life continues to cover all costs for the animals at Zevda's small animal shelter in Asparuchova, as all of their animals are street animals rescued by Zevda. We feature Zevda and some of her dogs on the back cover. We are grateful for every good soul that helps the animals out of need. But the biggest thank you goes to our animal friends, who made all this help possible with their valuable, loyal support.

Many thanks on behalf of all strays!

Animal Life, Dora Hardegger

As always, some of the lucky ones who were saved and healed sent you photo thanks, and we thank you for your help as well.

Penka found the little cat abandoned on the street. She immediately brought the sick cat to the clinic. Dr. med. vet. Nikolov diagnosed with FIV. The cat was treated in the clinic and is fit again now. But unfortunately no one wants to adopt the cat. Penka will take the little one with her.

The cat was taken to the clinic with a broken leg, where she received immediate treatment. The cat stays with Emilia until she can walk again. After that, a loving home is sought for the cutie.

Mescho was hit by a car, causing a ruptured spleen and a belly full of blood. Mescho was immediately operated on in the clinic. When he recovers from the first operation, a second operation will follow, which is necessary for his full recovery.

Penka found the sweet little one on the street. The poor dog couldn't walk. After a blood test, Dr. med. vet. Nikolov diagnosed liver problems and anemia. He will remain in the hospital until he recovers.

The dog had a lump on its head and an infection in its mouth. Penka took him to the clinic, where he has been on antibiotics for 10 days. When he is fully recovered, Emilia will take him into her home until animal rights activists find him a good home.

The dog was found in very poor condition. After a longer stay in the hospital, his health improved. After a full recovery, animal rights activists are looking for a loving home for the little dog.

This is Zevda, our longtime animal welfare partner who has a smaller shelter in Asparuchova, with one of her rescued street dogs. Zevda has been helping us for almost 23 years and is always taking in animals that can't find a home or that nobody wants.

In Zevda's small animal shelter, small and large dogs as well as cats find a nice, relaxed home. All of the animals at Zevda were cared for by Dr. medical vet. Kolev and neutered, who also has his clinic in Asparuchova, not far from Zevda's shelter.

Animal rights activist Zevda with two of her rescued dogs. The animals love Zevda very much. All animals living at Zevda are neutered and enjoy regular check-ups by Dr. medical vet. Kolev.

One of Zevda's female dog is taken care of by Dr. Kolev has been neutered and is already under anesthesia. Animal Life covers all costs for Zevda's animals because all of their charges are animal welfare emergencies.
